

Ruffer Illiquid Multi Strategies 2015 Ltd

SHARE PRICE PERFORMANCE SINCE LAUNCH ON 20 FEBRUARY 2015

Over the quarter, the S&P500 fell by 4.6% and CDX IG 5y widened by 6bps. Local currency performance of the underlying managers was in line with expectations, up by 2.5%, as some mark-to-market gains were offset by the negative carry associated with the strategies. Stronger GBPUSD dragged fund performance down by 1.8%.

During the first seven weeks of the year, risk assets were supported by robust economic growth, and equity prices continued to grind up. Markets did experience one minor bout of weakness, as the news broke that China's DeepSeek had built an AI model capable of challenging the US mega-caps, but for a fraction of the price. However, the market impact of this development proved to be short-lived. Since late February, investors have been focused on the economic impact of the Trump administration's tariff plans, culminating during the aftermath of 'Liberation Day' in early April.

Markets are now pricing in a significantly higher chance of a proper economic slowdown this year. The Atlanta Fed's GDPnow indicator is already suggesting that economic growth turned negative in Q1. However, so far, the de-risking has been relatively orderly. Hedge funds have reduced their exposure, but through increasing their short positions – in line with the new highs we've seen in repo volumes, gross exposure has increased. Bonds have also behaved as a successful offset. This has not only protected balanced investors' portfolio returns, but also led to positive corporate bond returns, as the fall in risk-free rates has more than offset the widening in spreads. We now have 85bps of Fed Funds cuts priced in by the end of 2025, whilst commentary from Fed officials has not suggested that monetary policy easing is close by. Core PCE is currently running at 2.8%, and forecasts indicate that the tariffs could push this to 4.5% by the end of the year. Absent a significant deterioration in the labour market data, which will take time to materialise, the Fed may have less room to ease than markets hope, setting the stage for some reversal up in UST yields. This could significantly drag on credit, as corporate bonds suffer from both higher risk-free rates and wider spreads. Our protection in synthetic credit will perform well in this scenario. Moreover, should the weakness in cash credit start to become disorderly, market fragilities, such as the mismatch in liquidity between credit ETFs and their underlying holdings, could create a strong market environment for our protective strategies to perform.
